Common Mistakes

Too long

One page is preferred; up to two pages if your experiences go beyond one page.

Grammatical or spelling errors

Proofread the document backward. Have at least two others proofread your resume. Do not rely on your computer's spell-checker or grammar-checker.

Hard to read

A poorly typed or copied resume does not look professional.

Print copies on a laser printer and use plain typeface, no smaller than 12-point font.

Disorganized

No logical order or arrangement; not easily read; hard to follow.

Use of incomplete sentences.

Avoid abbreviations, slang, and jargon.

Irrelevant information

If possible, customize each resume for each position.

Avoid crazy fonts, colored paper, photographs, binders, and graphics. Use white or off-white paper, plain type, black ink, and avoid symbols.

Too Modest

Your resume is a sales tool that shows your best qualifications compared to other candidates. Put your best foot forward without misrepresentation, falsification, or arrogance.

Unclear career objective

Too long, too short, not clearly defined, inappropriate, not related to job.

Poor description of experiences

Not enough description of tasks, skills, accomplishments; unnecessary addresses; too many dates; not results oriented.

Incomplete references

Include name, address, phone number, e-mail and correct title of all reference
